Statement of Purpose

Managing Lists of Historic Assets of Special Local Interest in Wales supplements *Planning Policy Wales*¹ and Technical Advice Note 24: The Historic Environment.²

It sets out general principles and good practice for preparing and managing lists of local historic assets — including criteria, nomination, consultation, validation, appeals and monitoring — and provides guidance on their use in the planning system.

This guidance is aimed primarily at local planning authorities, but also at third sector organisations and the owners of historic assets, to encourage all sectors to work together to protect and enhance historic assets of special local interest and inspire people to care about their local heritage.

- 1 Lists of historic assets of special local interest can recognise and celebrate local distinctiveness.
- 2 Lists of historic assets of special local interest can inspire people to value and care about their heritage.
- 3 Lists of historic assets of special local interest can help local planning authorities to protect locally important historic assets and conserve or enhance local character.
- 4 Lists of historic assets of special local interest can complement historic assets identified as nationally important.
- 5 The compilation of a list of historic assets of special local interest is voluntary, but where a local planning authority chooses to identify these assets, it must include policies for their conservation and enhancement in its development plan.
- 6 Involving local people in compiling lists of historic assets of special local interest fosters engagement and encourages partnership between the community and local planning authority.

Introduction ↴

The historic environment is a vital part of our shared cultural heritage. It shapes our sense of place and identity, and contributes to our well-being and quality of life. Some elements of the historic environment have been identified as nationally important — our scheduled monuments, listed buildings, conservation areas and registered historic parks and gardens. Alongside these nationally recognised assets, there is a valued local heritage which is often cherished by the community and contributes to character, but has no formal recognition or protection.

Local listing provides the information base that enables local planning authorities to recognise historic assets of particular local importance in the development management process, through policies in the local development plan which can be supported by supplementary planning guidance. This can help local planning authorities to manage change so that local historic assets remain responsive to present-day needs and contribute to the vitality of the area without an adverse impact on their character.

Local listing also highlights historic assets of special local interest and provides an opportunity for a community to get involved in their identification and in caring for them appropriately. Together, these benefits can help create the Wales we want in the future by meeting the well-being goals set out in the Well-being of Future Generations (Wales) Act 2015.³

Some local authorities already have local lists; this guidance sets out the general principles and good practice which should be followed when new lists of assets of special local interest are established.

1. What is a List of Historic Assets of Special Local Interest? ↴

Local planning authorities may choose to identify historic assets of special local interest and maintain a list of them. This list will include local historic assets which are not already designated scheduled monuments, listed buildings or registered historic parks and gardens. The assets identified for inclusion on the list should make an important contribution to local distinctiveness and have the potential to contribute to public knowledge.⁴ Their selection should be based on clear criteria, sound local evidence and consultation.

Where there is an adopted list of historic assets of special local interest, it must be added to the local historic environment record, which is the primary source of information about the historic environment that should be used for planning decisions and is publicly available.⁵

Historic assets of special local interest need not be limited to buildings, but can include all types of historic asset including parks, gardens and archaeological sites. Together, these elements make up the distinctive historic character of an area. This character is not just the sum of rare and important sites and structures, but also lies in the commonplace or everyday. Listing historic assets of special local interest complements statutory designation.

The local listing process may sometimes identify historic assets of potential national importance. Cadw is happy to consider requests for national designation and registration on behalf of the Welsh Ministers. Contact details are in the Contacts section.

2. Developing a List of Historic Assets of Special Local Interest ↴

2.1 Setting the Scene: Knowing the Area ↴

Before identifying the selection criteria, it may be helpful to prepare an overarching statement of significance which describes the local or regional historic character and what makes it distinctive.⁶ This statement should help the local planning authority to develop specific criteria related directly to local circumstances. The preparation of the statement could be a good opportunity to encourage community involvement. The statement could cover the following themes:

- the origins and growth of the area and significant periods in its history, such as prehistoric settlement or industrial development
- people or events of local note
- patterns of settlement; for example, street patterns, the relationship between buildings and open spaces
- traditions of building, such as locally distinctive materials, techniques and styles
- social history; for example, traditions and religious practices, literary and artistic associations, or historic place names.

*Managing Historic Character in Wales*⁷ explains the significance of a sound evidence base to understand and evaluate local character. Civic Trust Cymru and the Design Commission for Wales have produced toolkits to help identify historic urban character.⁸

2.2 Developing Selection Criteria ↴

To establish a firm foundation for a local list, it is essential to have clear criteria that have been subject to public consultation and formally adopted.

The criteria used for national designation and registration can be readily adapted and extended for local use. Some suggestions for criteria are shown in the accompanying table.

Details of the criteria used for designating listed buildings, scheduled monuments and registered historic parks and gardens are in *Technical Advice Note 24: The Historic Environment*⁹ and may provide a helpful generic framework for developing locally specific criteria. Local planning authority conservation area selection criteria may be helpful too.

Sample criteria suitable for assessing the special local interest of historic assets adapted from national designation and registration criteria

Criterion	Description
Aesthetic Interest: Architecture and Designed Landscapes	Historic assets of importance to the locality or region for the interest of their design, decoration or craftsmanship, including well-preserved examples of locally representative building types or styles, or locally distinctive techniques of construction or use of materials. Parks, gardens and places of recreation whose design contributes to local character and distinctiveness.
Archaeological Interest	Sites with compelling and identifiable archaeological evidence or potential; monuments of a category of site or period that is regionally or locally characteristic.
Historic Interest	Historic assets of all types which illustrate important aspects of the past life of the region or locality, particularly its social, economic, or cultural history.
Historical Association	Historic assets of all types which have close historical association with people, events or movements important to the region or locality.
Group Value	Historic assets of all types which have a clear visual, design or historical relationship, or which make a positive contribution to the setting of other historic assets, or to the character of a settlement.
Social and Communal Value	Historic assets which have social value as a source of local distinctiveness or social interaction; assets that contribute to local identity or collective memory; assets that have spiritual value, or symbolic significance.
Age	The age of any historic asset of any type is relevant, but certain historical periods, including the more recent, may have particular local significance.
Rarity	Historic assets that provide rare surviving evidence of a particular aspect of the history and development of the locality.

3. Creating and Managing a List of Historic Assets of Special Local Interest ↵

It is beneficial for policies in the local development plan to highlight the value of local heritage and state how its conservation and enhancement should be considered in the planning process. To apply these policies successfully, an objective evidence base firmly linked to the local development plan and supporting guidance is necessary and this can take the form of a list of historic assets of special local interest.

3.1 How to Identify Historic Assets of Special Local Interest ↵

Historic assets of special local interest should be identified through systematic survey, preferably linked to the local development plan preparation and review process. The survey process should bring together interested stakeholders and encourage community interest and involvement from the outset. Public meetings, exhibitions, web launches and social media can be effective ways of engaging the widest possible audience.

3.1.1 Systematic Survey ↵

Local planning authority areas may include very large numbers of historic assets which would make it impractical to carry out a survey of everything all at once. There are several ways in which local planning authorities can organise surveys to manage the process, for example:

- in geographical areas, such as community council areas, or relating surveys to other activity such as conservation area appraisals or a historic characterisation exercise
- by asset type as identified in the overarching statement of significance
- by historical theme as identified in the overarching statement of significance.

A good starting point for a systematic survey is information that is already available in the local historic environment record, which is maintained by the appropriate Welsh archaeological trust, and can be accessed online via Archwilio.¹⁰ The historic environment record may already contain information about sites and places of local historic, archaeological or architectural interest. It may hold records about local historic character as well as the findings of historical and archaeological investigations which may be helpful.

Another useful source is the National Monuments Record of Wales, which is maintained by the Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Wales, and the List of Historic Place Names of Wales.¹¹ The Welsh archaeological trusts and local authority in-house archaeological advisors also have expertise which will be an invaluable resource. Amenity societies and local historical or civic societies may also be able to help.

The Welsh Government's Historic Environment Service (Cadw) maintains Cof Cymru — an online record of the national historic assets of Wales.¹²

Existing characterisation studies, conservation area appraisals and other surveys may also be helpful. Publications and databases held by community, third sector, government and non-government organisations may also be potential sources of information. During the survey cycle, local planning authorities could invite nominations from the public based on the published criteria.

Site visits are essential to supplement the desk-based research and improve understanding of the physical characteristics and environment.

The ad hoc identification and consideration of sites through the development management process, in response to planning applications or pre-application enquiries, is not an appropriate way to identify historic assets of special local interest.

3.1.2 Working in Partnership ↵

Involving stakeholders in the preparation of a list of historic assets of special local interest captures a breadth of knowledge, experience and opinion, fosters learning and involvement, and encourages a sense of ownership.

A strong partnership between local authorities and the community is well-placed to identify historic assets of special local interest and curate a list that does justice to local heritage. Potentially, town and community councils, local groups, civic and history societies, schools and colleges, and independent volunteers all have a role to play.

Partnerships established to survey local historic assets, according to agreed objectives and criteria, will need coordination and some training may be needed.

3.1.3 Funding ↵

Some financial support for survey activity that involves community participation may be available, for example, from Cadw or the Heritage Lottery Fund. Contact details are in the Contacts section.

3.2 Supporting Evidence ↵

Local lists must be based on accurate and reliable evidence. Recommendations should be supported by information of sufficient detail and accuracy to demonstrate that the selection criteria have been met. A template for the recording of information may be helpful. It could include:

- a statement of significance
- an assessment of the asset against the agreed criteria
- administrative and locational information
- photographs.

3.3 Validation ↵

It is the responsibility of the local planning authority to validate sites for inclusion on a list of historic assets of special local interest, but there are different ways in which this might be done:

- validation could be carried out internally by local planning authority conservation staff
- where a conservation advisory panel already exists, it could be used to provide independent assessments of nominations
- a special selection panel could be established, drawing on local history, architecture, archaeology and conservation experts (including from neighbouring planning authorities), members of amenity societies and representatives of the local community.

Nominations should be assessed against the agreed criteria and any deficiencies or errors in supporting information should be identified. Public consultation to test the validity, reliability and credibility of nominations will encourage local commitment both to the process and to the list of historic assets of special local interest.

3.4 Notification, Consultation and Review ↵

When the local planning authority is minded to include historic assets on a local list, it should consult with the owners/occupiers and give them an opportunity to put their views forward. If the local planning authority wishes to go ahead and include a historic asset, the owner/occupier should be given the opportunity to ask for a review of the decision. The grounds for the review should be limited to:

- new evidence has come to light that was not available at the time of the assessment which shows that the building or site in question does not meet the locally agreed criteria
- existing valid planning or other permissions are in existence which allow for demolition or alteration.

Where an independent selection panel has been set up, it may be the appropriate body to handle reviews. Alternatively, another local planning authority could be nominated as the review body, or regional conservation officers' forums may be able to undertake this task.

3.5 Adoption ↵

When the nominated historic assets have been validated, the local planning authority should formally adopt the list through council procedure. Once formally adopted, the local planning authority should use the local list as part of the evidence base to inform the local development plan. Where an adopted local list identifies historic assets of special local interest, locally specific policies for their protection and enhancement should be included in the local development plan.¹³ Identifying locally specific policies for local historic assets in this way will ensure that these assets are considered through the planning system.

Further supporting guidance amplifying local development plan policies on local historic assets could be included as supplementary planning guidance.¹⁴ Supplementary planning guidance could include reference to the local list adopted by the local planning authority.

3.6 Monitoring and Review ↵

It is important that the list of historic assets of special local interest remains relevant, so a mechanism for ongoing monitoring and review is essential.

A review may result in additions to the list, but also in the removal of assets; for example, when an asset has been altered in such a way as to reduce its special local interest.

3.7 Access to Information ↵

It is important that lists of historic assets of special local interest are freely available and accessible. The list must be included in the local historic environment record,¹⁵ which is kept up to date and made accessible to everyone via Archwilio¹⁶ or in person. Local libraries and local planning authority websites are also good places to host copies of the local list.

Historic assets of special local interest complement nationally designated scheduled monuments, listed buildings and conservation areas, and registered historic parks and gardens. An integrated list that presents a complete picture of all the historic assets in an area may be beneficial for public understanding.

Linking the list of local historic assets to planning geographic information systems (GIS) will also ensure that information on the local list is readily available in the development management process.

Information about historic assets of special local interest should be presented in a standardised format as this will make it easier to use. This could include:

- a brief history and description of the asset highlighting features of significance
- the reasons why it has been included on the list
- management objectives.

4. Managing Change to Historic Assets of Special Local Interest ↵

4.1 National Planning Policy ↵

Planning Policy Wales states that local planning authorities may develop and publish lists of historic assets of special local interest which do not already have statutory protection.¹⁷

Lists of historic assets of special local interest in Wales are not accompanied by any additional consent processes over and above those required for planning permission. The purpose of maintaining a list of historic assets of special local interest is not to prevent change, but to ensure that the significance of local assets is taken into account in a proportionate way when change is being considered.

Historic assets of special local interest in conservation areas already benefit from the general control over demolition that is afforded by the Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1990.¹⁸ Similarly, the conservation of archaeological remains, whether they are scheduled or not, is a material consideration in the planning process.¹⁹

4.2 Local Development Plans ⇐

If a local planning authority chooses to identify historic assets of special local interest, policies for their conservation and enhancement must be included in the local development plan.²⁰ Policies included in an adopted local development plan carry substantial weight in the planning process. This is because planning applications must be determined in accordance with the adopted plan, unless material considerations indicate otherwise. Such policies could draw attention to the value of local historic assets and could, for example, help reinforce local character and promote high design standards.

4.3 Development Management ⇐

Buildings and sites included on a list of local historic assets are not protected by additional planning controls. However, local policies for their conservation mean that there is an opportunity to take their special interest into account when changes are proposed that would require planning permission. Changes, such as demolition and the extension and alteration of domestic buildings, may be classed as permitted development; where this applies, they can only be managed by introducing a requirement for planning permission through an Article 4 Direction.

Article 4 Directions should only be introduced in exceptional circumstances and where there is evidence to show that the use of permitted development rights would harm local amenity, but they may sometimes be appropriate to safeguard locally important buildings or features.²¹ There are a number of factors to consider with the use of Article 4 Directions, including increased numbers of applications (for which no fee would be payable).

4.4 Supplementary Planning Guidance ⇐

Supplementary planning guidance linked to existing policies about local heritage in the local development plan is a material consideration in the planning process.²²

Supplementary planning guidance could provide further detail about these policies and help to ensure that they are well understood and can be applied effectively.²³

Supplementary planning guidance about historic assets of special local interest should include the list of assets and might also cover:

- the overarching statement of significance
- a statement of significance and management objectives for each historic asset
- the criteria used for the selection of those historic assets
- the procedures for the identification and validation of nominations, consultation, review and record keeping
- general management objectives
- general design principles for alterations or extensions.

There may be scope for local authorities to collaborate on the production of supplementary planning guidance for historic assets of special local interest. Supplementary planning guidance aiming to protect and enhance historic assets of special local interest will be given substantial weight in decision making if it:

- derives from and is consistent with policies in the local development plan
- has been subject to public consultation
- has been formally approved by the local planning authority.²⁴

4.5 Information and Advice for Owners ⇐

By drawing attention to the value of local heritage and celebrating local character through a list of historic assets of special local interest, local planning authorities can encourage owners to preserve the special qualities of their buildings and sites.

It is important to explain to owners why their building or site is of special local interest and included on a local list. It is also important to explain the consequences of local listing and that it is not a barrier to change. A set of management objectives can help to explain the implications of local listing and identify objectives for conservation, repair and enhancement.

To help meet these objectives, local planning authorities should offer information and advice to owners and other interested parties on how best to care for historic assets of special local interest. General principles may be included within supplementary planning guidance, but local planning authorities should also consider offering informal advice to owners, including pre-application discussions when planning permission is required for proposed changes.

Owners can also be referred to other sources of information including the Cadw website — especially the section about maintaining your historic property — Maintenance Matters!²⁵ Cadw's guidance about managing change to listed buildings also contains useful general principles to consider when making changes to a historic building.²⁶ Owners can also be encouraged to participate in the Open Doors scheme or similar heritage open day schemes, which not only highlight the special local interest of the building or site, but also encourage public engagement with their local heritage.²⁷
